Locality and product

Reasoning about concurrency is complicated, but using an idea of global behaviour as a straightforward product of local behaviours avoids some difficult cases. We observe this in the setting of axiomatization, considering temporal logic as well as language equivalence.

(This is joint work with R. Ramanujam.)